

Dylan Tucker

The need for affordable art classes in New York City is great. The Educational Alliance has become known as a beacon of arts learning in a city that can too often put artistic endeavors on the back burner in search of more profitable ventures. But where would this city be without art? We are famous for our museums and architecture the world over. New York is known as a city where art and functionality work hand in hand. Without havens like the Educational Alliance art school, which nurture developing artists, this great New York legacy is being put in jeopardy. please preserve the great tradition that the Education Alliance has been a critical part of so that future generations may reap the benefits of exploring the arts. Not just for myself and my friends, but for the community and city as a whole.