I have taken numerous black and white photography classes at the educational alliance art school (and a few ceramics classes) and have found the classes both affordable and professionally taught. Because of this I am a huge fan of the EA art school and have recommended their programs to numerous people over the years. I am currently pregnant but planned on taking more B/W photography classes in the future at the Ed Alliance's art school.

It is an important resource in a city that is known for its arts but is quickly out pricing most of the artists and art students that live here. Keeping the art school in a space appropriate to an art school, one that has light and a wide offering of classes should be paramount in the renovation plans. This is the way that you will continue to attract both novice and serious art students and remain true to the community focus of programs.
