

Jonathan Bauch

I agree, a renovation is a positive step. But downsizing the school, moving it to the basement, and reducing its scope by cutting steel sculpture (welding) and photography is a way of making it irrelevant.

At a time when it is a unique institution, and New York City is a growing city. Why not expand the mission of the art instead of cutting it back?